Urban Regeneration as a mean of economic development and social cohesion

The various dimensions of urban life — environmental, economic, social, and cultural — are interconnected and require an integrated approach. Urban regeneration measures should go beyond the physical renewal of cities, combining actions that promote education, economic growth, social inclusion, and environmental protection — an approach known as integrated sustainable urban development. The event, organized by ANCE Calabria within the framework of the #EURegionsWeek 2025 – Close to You, aims to foster territorial dialogue on urban regeneration as a driver of economic development and social cohesion. The focus will be on social inclusion, particularly through social housing policies integrated with strategies for economic and social urban regeneration, ecological transition, and strengthened legality — as a structural response to the urban and social challenges faced by cities in Calabria. On these topics, the ABITAlab's activities for the ReKAP Strategy to address adaptive technologies will be presented during the session.
